SAN FRANCISCO – (June 6, 2017) [Yerba Buena Center for the Arts \(YBCA\)](http://Yerba Buena Center for the Arts (YBCA)) today announced its YBCA 100, an annual list of the 100 people, organizations, and movements that are shaping the future of culture. Now in its fourth year, YBCA 100 celebrates the provocateurs, instigators, and innovators who are using their creative platforms to motivate social change. The outcome of this year’s nomination process—led by YBCA staff, members, YBCA Fellows, and the board—is a diverse list of media makers, entertainers, technologists, chefs, artists, entrepreneurs, humanitarians, and activists. It is an intermingling of notable names and emerging artists still under the radar.

Select honorees will take part in the annual YBCA 100 Summit on Saturday, October 28, 2017, an entire day devoted to exploring how art and culture can create societal change. Open to the public, the event will include keynote addresses by Jill Soloway, creator of the groundbreaking Amazon series’ Transparent and I Love Dick and Abdi Soltani, executive director of the ACLU of Northern America, with talks and panel discussions with journalist, filmmaker, CEO of Define American Jose Antonio Vargas; activist and BART board president Lateefah Simon, and others. The day’s events will also include performances by dancer Lil Buck, award-winning poet Saul Williams, and more. For the complete list of the YBCA 100 honorees, click here.

“We are always seeking the change makers, the creative minds, who are asking the questions and making the provocations that shape our culture, and of course our own work here at YBCA,” remarks YBCA Chief of Program and Pedagogy Marc Bamuthi Joseph. “The recognition of these change makers informs YBCA’s curatorial practice and programming efforts. They are sources of inspiration who surface throughout the calendar in our performance and exhibition spaces.”

Remarks YBCA CEO Deborah Cullinan: “The YBCA 100 list represents a cross-section of people whose work has the power to create cultural movement. YBCA’s vision is to create a community that thrives on inspiration. These individuals have struck our imagination in profound ways and deeply influence YBCA and the community at large through their provocations. We can’t wait to celebrate them in October.”
